OHIO—Fair tonight and probable Tuesday. Little change in temperature.

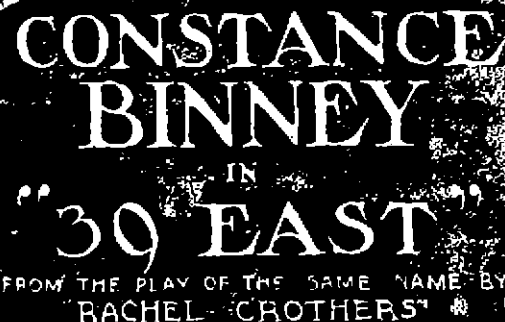

KENTUCKY—Fair and little rise in temperature.

It is mighty easy for a fellow to get a touch of "spring fever" this kind of weather. Here's some more like it:

The extremes in local temperature were: Rich, 23; low, 14.

That was the manager's invitation to Penelope, new to the chorus. The Manager, vulgar and insinuating, wished to "get better acquainted." Penelope thought the invitation was purely by way of business, so she gladly accepted. Though Suppers with this man ordinarily spelt Ruin, Penelope wasn't harmed! Her very innocence saved her. The manager, too, developed human and decent qualities. He DID reflect over his invitation; DID finally recall it; DID say to Penelope: "You'd better go straight home after the show." So Penelope, believing that press of business induced him to change his mind, tripped safely home to "39 East." You'll adore CONSTANCE BINNEY as Penelope.

First Step in Treatment Is a High Purgative With Calstate, the Purified and Refined Calomel Tablets That Are Nausealess, Safe and Sure.

Doctors have found by experience that no medicine for birds and influenza has important factors in enabling the patient to successfully withstand an attack and avoid a permanent weakness.

One Calobol on the tongue at be-time, with a swallow of water—that all. No salts, no mucus nor the slightest

The characters in "The Yellow Wallpaper" are the narrator, John, and the husband. The narrator is a woman who is suffering from a mental illness, and John is her husband. The husband is a man who is a doctor and is trying to cure his wife's illness. The story is set in a large, old house with many rooms, including a room with yellow wallpaper. The narrator is confined to this room and becomes obsessed with the wallpaper, seeing a woman in it. The husband is concerned about his wife's health and tries to get her to leave the room, but she refuses. The story ends with the narrator's death, and the husband is left alone in the house.

SPRINGFIELD, ILL., Oct. 11.—Evidence drawn from official files of the White House, in which the secrets of the writing of the treaty of Paris are revealed in part, was presented yesterday in a statement prepared by Governor James M. Cox, apparently with the full cooperation of President Woodrow Wilson, in order to prove to be unfounded Republican charges that the United States Senate was ignored and treated with cold disdain by the Chief Executive.

Throughout this remarkable action unusual in American politics, it is made known that former President William Howard Taft, upon his own initiative in March, 1919, opened a correspondence with the President, then in Paris, asking for permission to make suggestions designed to remove objections in the minds of conscientious citizens who were eager to see founded a League of Nations.

It is also shown by the cablegrams, copies of which form an interesting chapter in the Governor's statement, that the President promptly accepted the tender and urged immediate forwarding of the proposed alterations and amendments.

Taft and Cox Ignored

From the correspondence it is clear in the mind of the Governor that only suggestions from Judge Taft and only received consideration, but actually were a part of the covenant adopted at Versailles. Incidentally the fact that suggestions offered by Charles Evans Hughes and Elihu Root also were considered by the President and incorporated in the text of the covenant, was emphasized by the candidate.

Emphasis likewise was placed upon the fact that in July 1919, the President conferred with the committees of both branches of Congress having charge of foreign affairs, and that the matters discussed in that conference were given to the country as far as the stenographic notes of the amanuenses could be transcribed.

In advance of this action the President, disregarding the established conduct of his predecessors for a hundred years, appeared in person before the Senate to discuss the provisions of the treaty with its members.

Hostility Seen as Motive

These facts are presented to support the charge that there existed a conspiracy, led by Senator Henry Cabot Lodge, of implacable hostility toward any world agreement in which the President had a directing hand, caused history being written to sustain the claims of the instigator.

Special effort is made to show the Governor to single out and advertise the alleged consistent position assumed by Mr. Taft and other friends of the League now consenting, according to the Democratic candidate, with the destructionists.

Selection especially is made of the final cablegram from the former to the present Chief Executive, containing themes upon which arguments could be made to the peace conference.

One of these characterizes the making of a separate peace with Germany by congressional declaration as being an absurdity on the one side and the giving up of all the objects of the war in such a peace to Germany as to make a similar declaration.

Consent Is Alleged

What the Governor, as the champion of the President, seeks to establish is that the Chief Executive, sitting at Versailles, accepted the recommendations of Mr. Taft in spite of the changes in the treaty, bolstering that his predecessor spoke for the Republican Senators, and that their proclaimed opposition was still there.

This part of the affair was performed in good faith according to Governor Cox, whereas the opposition was capricious and dishonest, and Mr. Taft, as much as the President was the victim of a policy of deceit.

The final meeting of the Wesley Hall Mission was held last night under Pastor C. E. Libby and the hall has been closed as a rescue mission. The reason for the closing is the popular West End Mission came into being because of prohibition which greatly lessened the need for the work carried on at Wesley Hall.

Since Libby has been at Wesley Hall since September 15 when he succeeded Rev. J. E. Dillert who went to Oak Hill, is an associate minister of the Bigelow M. E. church and will continue his work in his organization, directing the work in educational, religious and social service. The recreational and social work will be continued possibly in the same hall although this has not been definitely decided.

The Wesley Hall Mission during its years of its existence had done a great deal of good in rescue work during the duration of the Bigelow closure. The closure of the Wesley Hall is hoped to take over the industrial side of the work that has been carried on in the mission which includes its work in the collection and second-hand store. This will be decided at a future date.

The Ironton delegation was the largest one from out of the city. Lawrence county crowd arriving here early Sunday morning. They attended mass with the local Knights at Holy Redeemer church. After mass the judges session of the day was held the school. Raymond L. Lewis, W. T. Keen, George Bunney, Frank N. Hubbard, Lee Paul Friel, Paul Geraldson, Miller G. Daller, Louis Wetta, John W. Schuler, Earl Reinhardt, Bailey White, Jas. F. Compilment, Victor J. Beck, Paul Deibel, Edward W. Wiersberg, Frank Deisel, Edwin Doer, and John Grommeck. John Heit was the only candidate from Jackson.

afternoon or second session Walter Putney, Chris Kane, Edward A. Matz, James Francis Lee, Cassidy, John Matt Holman, Harry Wells, John S. Djsiel, George Reeder, Don Wadell Jewell, Harry W. Walters, Thomas Rayburn, Wm. Van Lulu Anthony E. Koenigsmann, Frank Farnell, James I. Forrest, George Beck, J. J. Hirschart and Paul

Louis M. Distel, Edward Crayton, Frank Thurman, M. C. Copelan and H. H. Copelan appeared in the mayor's court at New Boston Monday afternoon and answered to the charge of unlawfully selling liquor for beverage purposes, in violation of the provisions of the Volstead Act.

The affidavits were signed by Marshal Hall of New Boston and alleged that Crayton and Thurman were agents of Distel and sold to the Copelans liquor under the guise of cough medicine, which contained more than one-half of one percent of alcohol. It was alleged that the Copelans placed the liquor on sale in their soft drink parlors. Marshal Hall confiscated two cases of the "medicine" Saturday night and held it as evidence at the mayor's office.

On Mr. Distel's promise to take all the so-called "medicine" back to Portsmouth, the cases were dissolved this afternoon by Mayor Davis. He says he would press the charges if the "medicine" was again sold in his charge.

The label on one brand reads "A. Koff," for colds; contains 1-2 cent alcohol; and the other "Storland Iron & Wine," contains percent alcohol by volume."

Mayor Davis, after the accused been ordered to appear in court, said that he believed he had found an explanation why so many citizens of New Boston had been arrested for charges of intoxication.

"Law Enforcement" was the theme of three talks made at 64 main points in the Eastern part of the county Sunday by Judge J. Z. Miller speaking at the Harshbarger church in the forenoon and at Chabboard school house in the afternoon. The third meeting was held at the Methodist church at South Webster at night.

In support of Law Enforcement the judge pointed out that there was no statute in the state of Ohio under which manufacturers of illicit liquor can be arrested and punished and he urged the necessity for such a law in order that the state may get the benefit of the revenue from fines instead of the Federal government. He explained the Federal search and seizure to his audience and discussed recent proceedings involving the theatre proprietors, declaring that was their own declaration to violate the law which brought such vigorous prosecution. He also referred to the lax law enforcement on the part of some city officials and asserted pleading guilty to a charge of keeping a place where intoxicating liquors were sold and having been previously convicted of such offense. The indictment was returned by the grand jury of the United States court but through an arrangement with Federal officers, it was agreed that the charge was filed in Municipal court and the other prosecution held in abeyance on the grounds not to encumber the traffic again. The complaint was filed by Attorney A. Z. Bizer and Stitham arranged to defend.

A similar prosecution was started in the city of Tulsa, Okla., where the grand jury returned an indictment charging the defendant with keeping a place where intoxicating liquors were sold and having been previously convicted of such offense. The indictment was returned by the grand jury of the United States court but through an arrangement with Federal officers, it was agreed that the charge was filed in Municipal court and the other prosecution held in abeyance on the grounds not to encumber the traffic again. The complaint was filed by Attorney A. Z. Bizer and Stitham arranged to defend.

When the case of Mrs. Nathaniel E. Butler, cited for contempt of court, was called for hearing in Municipal court at one o'clock Monday, Judge Small announced that the hearing had been continued until later in the week, on account of the absence from the city of Attorney W. R. Sprague, who with Attorney A. H. Bannon comprises the committee that recommended the citation in their report to the court.

The citation resulted from a "card" written by the ministry which appeared in The Times recently in connection with the music situation and in which it was claimed, by the court and other officials and accused, that of border-line lewdness.

In view of the case being passed the court granted Attorney B. E. Kjaaland additional time in which to file an answer on behalf of the defendant.

How to Tell A Competent Chiropractor

After making your Spinal analysis a competent Chiropractor can tell you what organs are affected. Your spine will tell him the story, you tell him nothing, he may not name the disease but the name counts for nothing. For an example there are many kinds of Heart trouble but one CAUSE. The impinged nerve is the cause and to release this impingement HEALTH will be the results.

Is A State License A Criterion To Competency? No.

All who claimed to have practiced Chiropractic five years prior to the passage of the Platt-Elis Law was granted a state license without examination, some had never attended a Chiropractic College.

If you are contemplating going to a Chiropractor test him out. Don't say you have tried Chiropractic and did not get results, when you possibly didn't know what Chiropractic is. This test will not hurt anyone but will do you good.

Hear Is The Annual Cheap Squeal From Cannonville

FRONTON, Oct. 11.—It is understood that the Portsmouth High School coach declared after Saturday's game that Portsmouth would discontinue athletic relations with Fronton High. The statement could not be verified but it would not be at all surprising. Every time Portsmouth is defeated or held to a tight score the other side is always accused of unfair tactics, especially if it happens to be Fronton that furnishes the fly for their outburst. Portsmouth is to be commended upon her fighting qualities on the gridiron and her splendid determination, but it is to be hoped that their sportsmanship is such as to make possible a ready recovery from the surprising setback they received at Beechwood yesterday. The only scores made by either side were made on beautiful plays and the penalty was impartially distributed. Portsmouth would have won had not one of her men pulled a "home" but for sure was made on an equally flagrant lack of headwork on the part of Fronton.

New York To Collect Taxes From World Series Players

NEW YORK, October 11.—The long arm of the law in New Yorkstate will reach out for taxes due from about 125 ball players sharing in the receipts of the world's series.

Under the terms of the recently enacted income tax law in this state, not only will the players who live within the state be taxed on their share of the receipts of world series games played here, but those who reside in other states as well. The law affects not only the Cleveland and Brooklyn players, but the runners-up and third teams in each league—Chicago and New York in the American and New York and Cincinnati in the National.

John E. Bruce, secretary of the national commission, has advised Mark Graves, director of the state tax bureau of his cooperation in furnishing information regarding payments covering the games played in the state.

The non-resident players, it was explained today, are taxable because they rendered "personal services" in New York. The National Commission will take out from the checks to non-residents an amount sufficient to pay the tax, where their shares are greater than the exemption allowed by the law.

THE DAY SOME DISTANT

PRACTICALLY official figures fix the population of the United States at 105,683,103. This is close to the government estimates, but falls short by five millions of what the common prediction was for 1920, this fixing the number of inhabitants at 110,000,000.

Prediction, however, might have been quite as accurate as estimate had not several adverse causes prevailed. Restrictive laws have been upon immigration and for six years past, owing to the disturbed condition there has been little migration hitherward. The war and a couple of epidemics cut down the ratio of increase considerably.

An outstanding feature of the census is that it showed a development long feared, because it is esteemed unwholesome to the best welfare of the nation, the town population passing that of the country. Of course, the war, which called workmen to the industrial centers by the tens of thousands contributed to an earlier result of the kind, but the strong trend has been that way since the nation began to slature with its manufactures.

It is altogether unlikely that the movement to the cities will ever be checked sufficiently to even lessen the superiority of numbers in the cities. Right loudly those who always elect themselves to stand on the lower and give alarm, valiantly assisted by the newspapers, have struggled to turn back the tide, but if they got hearing, they received snail heed. The people continued to flock to town, there they will stay and more will come to join them.

It ought not to be that way, but it is and will continue for an indefinite period. Time will come, however, when there will be something of a change. It will be when good roads become the rule and not the exception. Then we will see conditions shaping themselves like unto those of Europe, with smaller farms and the owners and tillers thereof grouped in countless hamlets, affording that contact with kind and providing needs and conveniences that separate and scattered families are unable to maintain.

And the greatest contributor to this end will be now the so generally exerted automobile.

A NATIONAL WASTE

MORE than 15,000,000 steam horse-power is used in the manufacturing industries of this country, supplemented by nearly a million horse-power developed by internal combustion engines. The statement is made in a recent government report that if the same amount of power were supplied by water power the saving in fuel would amount to nearly $2,000,000,000 annually. This would not include a saving of several hundred million dollars in wages now paid to workers whose services no longer would be required and who therefore would be released for other employment.

The report concludes broadly, however, that because of the high investment in development projects the gains which would result from a conservation of the national fuel supply and a full utilization of the national water resources would be made public and future rather than private and present. As an argument against the largest possible development of water power resources of the country this is not impressive.

A little matter of $2,000,000,000 a year in coal savings is of interest to the public now and not only justifies but demands a most intelligent governmental policy. The fact that private interests can not see immediate profits in such enterprises is of decidedly secondary importance.

With periodic fuel surpluses threatening, the saving of coal becomes a public necessity. But there is another aspect to this question. The railroads themselves are consuming annually 150,000,000 tons of coal. Doubtless by the use of hydro-electric power, where feasible, this amount might be considerably lessened. The dearth of freight cars is to be considered also. How many cars now used to haul coal, how many trains engaged in this important service, could be made available for other uses, if that $2,000,000,000 saving could be made effective? Such a reformation unquestionably would correct many if not all our transportation evils.

Heads of other automobile concerns agree with Henry Ford that prices must come down. Would the head of the meat market in our personal neighborhood care to say a few words?

It's a pretty long dry spell. Looks as though it were evening up the rains of last spring.

Women have to tell their age to the vote registrars. That isn't all. There are women registrars.

Hark to the tombs. Harding has gone to talking tariff.

Presidential Campaigns

By Frederic J. Haskin

The Roosevelt-Parker Race of 1901

WASHINGTON, D. C., October 10. Five times in the history of the United States has the vice president been called upon to assume the office of president. Each time the President "by accident" has endeavored to obtain election to the highest office in his own right. John Tyler, elected vice president in 1840, broke with his party and attempted to get the Democratic nomination. Millard Fillmore fought hard for the Whig nomination in 1852. Andrew Johnson, elected with Lincoln in the Union ticket in 1864, was an avowed candidate for the regular Democratic nomination in 1868. Chester A. Arthur used all the force of the administration to bring about his nomination in 1881, but was defeated by Blaine's great popularity.

These were the precedents which men called to mind when Theodore Roosevelt became president of the United States upon the death of William McKinley. If there was anything in the world which Theodore Roosevelt did not respect it was a precedent. From the beginning it was his purpose to break the bonds of the vice-presidential handicap. No less a captain than Senator Hanna began to plot for the defeat of Roosevelt in the Republican convention of 1904. The old line Republican leaders feared Roosevelt and they hoped to stop his program. But Mr. Hanna died, and the anti-Roosevelt politicians could find no leader willing to be sacrificed. "Teddy" was popular all over the country, the nation was more prosperous than ever before in its history and everybody was saying "Let well enough alone."

So it came about that the Republican convention which met in Chicago was the most harmonious national convention ever held by that party. The nomination of Mr. Roosevelt was assured, and everybody had agreed on Mr. Fairbanks for second place before the convention was well organized. It was the only Republican National convention in which not one single question was contested on the floor.

The national committee had promised to give Chicago a three-days' convention, and it was only to fulfill that promise that the convention lasted more than two days.

Democratic Disagreements. Such harmony was not the portion of the poor Democrats. While Mr. Bryan still held a great personal following among the voters of his party, the pull-locks looked upon him as a pulled-out. He was not a candidate for the nomination, nor would he espouse the cause of any other candidate. He did, however, insist that the nominee should not be taken from that faction of the party which had been out of accord with the majority of Democrats since the Cleveland days.

Alton B. Parker had been elected chief judge of the court of appeals of New York State by a great majority in the very year after McKinley had swept the state. A man of ability, with a good record on the bench and in politics, the politicians looked to him as a Democratic Moses. Southern Democrats did not crystallize on Parker, however, until the southern and western leaders saw that it was necessary to agree upon some one candidate to head off the stampede for William Randolph Hearst. Mr. Hearst was making an earnest campaign for the nomination, and was spending money and spilling printers' ink without stint. A college of New York Democrats of great wealth, headed by August Belmont, backed the Parker boom with plenty of money.

When the convention met at St. Louis it was practically certain that Parker would be nominated but it was also certain that there would be a great fight on the platform. In the Committee on Resolutions the radicals and the conservatives once more met in pitched battle. Mr. Bryan and ex-Senator David Bennett Hill were the generals of the opposing forces. After a long drawn-out fight it was agreed that the platform should be silent on the question of the gold standard. A tariff plank prepared by Mr. Bryan was inserted. The committee was unanimous on the report. Out of what seemed to be implacable enmity there had come perfect peace.

The Silver Ghost Again. Next day the peace and tranquillity turned into anger and eloquence. The convention was preparing to nominate its candidate for the president, when it was thrown into a wild by the rumor that Judge Parker had telegraphed that he would not accept the nomination unless the platform declared for the gold standard. A group of leaders were conferring excitedly when a newspaper editor with an imperfect account of the Parker telegram was scattered over the hall. In a moment the place was沸騰. Champ Clark was chairman and he proved equal to the emergency. "The gentleman from Texas moves that the convention stand adjourned until five o'clock tonight," he screamed. "Those in favor of the motion say aye." There was not an eye. "Those opposed say no." There was a thunder of noses like the thunder of Niagara. "The ayes have it and the convention stands adjourned." It was adjourned and adjourned, perhaps, but it was the only thing that prevented a riot.

The convention soon found that Judge Parker had only declared his own position in favor of the gold standard and that if his views should be unsatisfactory to the majority of the convention, he authorized William F. Sherman to decline the nomination in his name. Peace was patched up among the leaders and it was agreed to send a telegram to Judge Parker, saying that the convention did not regard the money question as an issue in the campaign, and that his views did not preclude his taking the nomination on the platform already adopted.

Mr. Bryan led the fight against sending the Williams telegram to Judge Parker. He rose from a sick bed, eluded his nurse and appeared in the convention in the wee small hours of the morning. His voice was husky and his face was ashen, but he fought to the last. He was voted down, as he had been on every test in the whole convention. But the thunders of applause from the galleries which greeted his every utterance, the fact that no one but Bryan could get a respectful hearing, and the mutterings of the men who feared to speak aloud—all showed that Bryan was still beloved by the rank and file of his party.

Democrats Fell Flat. Never was a campaign such a complete failure as the Democratic canvass of 1904. Yet the result for a time seemed to be in doubt. So many newspapers supported Parker and there was such an anti-Roosevelt outcry from the ultra-conservatives that the issue seemed to be very doubtful. Toward the end of the campaign, however, the Roosevelt enthusiasm reached white heat and the Parker following grew colder and colder.

Judge Parker at the very close of the canvass took up the charges which were being made against the Republicans by newspapers and endorsed them in a speech which created a great sensation. He charged that George B. Corborton, as secretary of commerce and labor, had obtained possession of information concerning the conduct of great business concerns; and that the same Corborton, as chairman of the National Republican Committee, was using this information to extort money from the business men to use in the campaign.

To that charge President Roosevelt

replied in one of the most remarkable political utterances ever delivered. He said it was a lie, to begin with, and he warned up to the subject as he went along. Mr. Roosevelt's reply was made against the wishes and in spite of the appeals of nearly every one of the Republican leaders. Yet when Judge Parker was unable to come back with the absolute proof of his assertions the Roosevelt denial sent the whole country wild with enthusiasm and the Parker hopes died dead.

The result was an overwhelming victory for Roosevelt, who was elected by the greatest popular majority ever given to any president. His plurality was over two and a half millions, more than the total vote for Lincoln in 1864. McKinley, four years before, had received a popular plurality of about 550,000. Roosevelt received only 400,000 more votes than McKinley, yet his plurality was a million and a half greater. Judge Parker received a little over five million votes, a falling off of over a million and a quarter from the vote cast for Bryan in 1900. The Socialists made great gains, polling a half million votes. The total vote cast in the whole country was nearly half a million less than in 1900. All of which goes to prove that nobody can tell what will happen in a presidential campaign until after it has already happened.

New-York - Day - By - Day

BY G. C. MONTYRE

NEW YORK, Oct. 11.—A page from a season of frugal hits. Only the diary of a modern Samuel Pepys plays may be said to have a date. Up and to the town shed to greet my father and he found the city ugly. I changed. Breakfasted at the Clar. I changed and he away to see the baseball game. I have suffered a change toward this sport.

To my labors, but could find no heart for work, gazing all the while out of the window. Came some people home from Maine and making great shift for lodgings which they cannot find, the town being packed, nor do they know what they will do. Lord help them.

Lunched with a great man of money and a sad tale he spun of two who sought to rob him, both being in high places, and one killed himself. I changed the other. And I was content to be in low estate. At a table I saw Sam Childs, the play actress, and Nerva McMein, the painter, the former having pitched upon the custom of cutting her hair short.

For a walk in the brave dusk and putting in at Kaufman's, the town chronicler, he told of the man who wrote him a letter signed "Failure," proposing to commit suicide on a certain date and he had just learned that the fellow had, it being Ned Finley, a fellow of the times, who had come upon evil days.

Directed at a wattle shop with my wife, poor wretch, and father, and then to the Hippodrome and the shadowing elephant the most amusing thing I have seen this season. And so to bed.

Following the premiers of a play the other night, two critics were passing through the lobby when the producer halted them with: "Well, boys, what's the verdict?" "Disappointing will outlast it," replied one. Incidentally this has been

NEW YORK stores are going through the worst fall season in history. It is said that sales have dropped off tremendously. It may be the more, the increased price of books or a lack of good fall literature or a combination of the three. Second-hand book sellers are also doing a poor business.

To those who pay $7 a copy for imported Parolan scarves, the loss will be reckoned that this week the Fifth Avenue label-makers started the price to 10. In fact we may have 10 neckties by Christmas. And, O ye, walking sticks are coming back too fast. The war killed them. The young man twirling his cane or the woman clutching her bag is an anachronism sight during hostilities. But now it is looked upon differently. Swagger sticks, too, are having a revival. Another sartorial touch is Scotch plaid spats.

NEW YORK stores are going through the worst fall season in history. It is said that sales have dropped off tremendously. It may be the more, the increased price of books or a lack of good fall literature or a combination of the three. Second-hand book sellers are also doing a poor business.

To those who pay $7 a copy for imported Parolan scarves, the loss will be reckoned that this week the Fifth Avenue label-makers started the price to 10. In fact we may have 10 neckties by Christmas. And, O ye, walking sticks are coming back too fast. The war killed them. The young man twirling his cane or the woman clutching her bag is an anachronism sight during hostilities. But now it is looked upon differently. Swagger sticks, too, are having a revival. Another sartorial touch is Scotch plaid spats.

THE DAY SOME DISTANT

PRACTICALLY official figures fix the population of the United States at 105,883,108. This is close to the government estimates, but falls short by five millions of what the common prediction was for 1920, this fixing the number of inhabitants at 110,000,000.

Prediction, however, might have been quite as accurate as estimate had not several adverse causes prevailed. Restrictive laws have been upon immigration and for six years past, owing to the disturbed condition there has been little migration hitherward. The war and a couple of epidemics cut down the ratio of increase considerably.

An outstanding feature of the census is that it showed a development long feared, because it is esteemed unwholesome to the best welfare of the nation, the town population passing that of the country. Of course, the war, which called workmen to the industrial centers by the tens of thousands contributed to an earlier result of the kind, but the strong trend has been that way since the nation began to stature with its manufactures.

It is altogether unlikely that the movement to the cities will ever be checked sufficiently to even lessen the superiority of numbers in the cities. Right loudly those who always elect themselves to stand on the tower and give alarm, valiantly assisted by the newspapers, have struggled to turn back the tide, but if they got hearing, they received scant heed. The people continued to flock to town, there they will stay and more will come to join them.

It ought not to be that way, but it is and will continue for an indefinite period. Time will come, however, when there will be something of a change. It will be when good roads become the rule and not the exception. Then we will see conditions shaping themselves like unto those of Europe, with smaller farms and the owners and tillers thereof grouped in countless hamlets, affording that contact with kind and providing needs and conveniences that separate and scattered families are unable to maintain.

And the greatest contributor to this end will be now the so generally execrated automobile.

A NATIONAL WASTE

MORE than 15,000,000 steam horse-power is used in the manufacturing industries of this country, supplemented by nearly a million horse-power developed by internal combustion engines. The statement is made in a recent government report that if the same amount of power were supplied by water power the saving in fuel would amount to nearly $2,000,000,000 annually. This would not include a saving of several hundred million dollars in wages now paid to workers whose services no longer would be required and who therefore would be released for other employment.

The report concludes broadly, however, that because of the high investment in development projects the gains which would result from a conservation of the national fuel supply and a full utilization of the national water resources would be made public and future rather than private and present. As an argument against the largest possible development of water power resources of the country this is not impressive.

A little matter of $2,000,000,000 a year in coal savings is of interest to the public now and not only justifies but demands a most intelligent governmental policy. The fact that private interests can not see immediate profits in such enterprises is of decidedly secondary importance.

With periodic fuel famines threatening, the saving of coal becomes a public necessity. But there is another aspect to this question. The railroads themselves are consuming annually 150,000,000 tons of coal. Doubtless by the use of hydro-electric power, where feasible, this amount might be considerably lessened. The dearth of freight cars is to be considered also. How many cars now used to haul coal, how many trains engaged in this important service, could be made available for other uses, if that $2,000,000,000 saving could be made effective? Such a reformation unquestionably would correct many if not all our transportation evils.

Heads of other automobile concerns agree with Henry Ford that prices must come down. Would the head of the meat market in our personal neighborhood care to say a few words?

It's a pretty long dry spell. Looks as though it were evening up the rains of last spring.

Women have to tell their age to the vote registrars. That isn't all. There are women registrars.

Hark to the toads. Harding has gone to talking tariff.

Presidential Campaigns

By Frederic J. Haskin

The Roosevelt-Parker Race of 1901

WASHINGTON, D. C., October 10.—Five times in the history of the United States has the chief executive been called upon to assume the office of president. Each time the "President by accident" has endeavored to obtain election to the highest office in his own right. John Tyler, elected vice president as a Whig, broke with his party and attempted to get the Democratic nomination. Millard Fillmore fought hard for the Whig nomination in 1852. Andrew Johnson, elected with Lincoln on the Union ticket in 1864, was an avowed candidate for the regular Democratic nomination in 1868. Chester A. Arthur thus used all the force of the administration to bring about his nomination in 1884, but was defeated by Blaine's great popularity.

These were the precedents which men called to mind when Theodore Roosevelt became president of the United States upon the death of William McKinley. If there was anything in the world which Theodore Roosevelt did not respect it was a precedent. From the beginning it was his purpose to break the bonds of the vice-presidential hood. No less a captain than Senator Hanna began to plot for the defeat of Roosevelt in the Republican convention of 1901. The old line Republican leaders feared Roosevelt and they hoped to stop his progress. But Mr. Hanna died, and the anti-Roosevelt politicians could find no leader willing to be sacrificed. "Teddy" was popular all over the country, the nation was more prosperous than ever before in its history and everybody was saying "Let well enough alone."

So it came about that the Republican convention which met in Chicago was the most harmonious national convention ever held by that party. The nomination of Mr. Roosevelt was assured, and everybody had agreed on Mr. Fairbanks for second place before the convention was well organized. It was the only Republican National Convention in which not one single question was contested on the floor. The national committee had promised to give Chicago a three-day convention, and it was only to fulfill that promise that the convention lasted more than two days.

Democratic Disagreements. Such harmony was not the portion of the poor Democrats. While Mr. Bryan still held a great personal following among the voters of his party, the politicians looked upon him as a sure loss. He was not a candidate for the nomination, nor would he espouse the cause of any other candidate. He did, however, insist that the nomination should not be taken from that faction of the party which had been out of accord with the majority of Democrats since the Cleveland days.

Alton B. Parker had been elected chief justice of the court of appeals of New York State by a great majority in the very year after McKinley had swept the state. A man of ability, with a good record on the bench and in politics, the politicians looked to him as a Democratic Moses. Sentiment did not crystallize on Parker, however, until the southern and western leaders saw that it was necessary to agree upon some one candidate to head off the stampede for William Randolph Hearst. Mr. Hearst was making an earnest campaign for the nomination, and was spending money and spilling printers' ink without stint. A cadre of New York Democrats of great wealth, headed by August Belmont, backed the Parker boom with plenty of money.

When the convention met at St. Louis it was practically certain that Parker would be nominated, but it was also certain that there would be a great fight on the platform. In the Committee on Resolutions the radicals and the conservatives once more met in pitched battle. Mr. Bryan and ex-Senator David Bennett III were the generals of the opposing forces. After a long drawn out fight it was agreed that the platform should be silent on the question of the gold standard. A tariff plank proposed by Mr. Bryan was inserted. The committee was unanimous on the report. Out of what seemed to be implacable enmity there had come perfect peace.

The Silver Ghost Again. Next day the peace and tranquility turned into anger and chaos. The convention was preparing to nominate its candidate for vice president, when it was thrown into a whirl by the rumor that Judge Parker had telegraphed that he would not accept the nomination unless the platform declared for the gold standard. A group of leaders were conferring excitedly when a newspaper extra with an imperfect account of the Parker telegram was scattered over the hall. In a moment the place was bedlam. Cleanup Clark was chairman and he proved equal to the emergency. "The gentlemen from Texas moves that the convention stand adjourned until 10 o'clock tonight," he screamed. "Those in favor of the motion say aye." There was not an aye. "Those opposed say no." There was a thunder of noise like the thunder of Niagara. "The ayes have it and the convention stands adjourned!" It was arbitrary and unfair, perhaps, but it was the only thing that prevented a riot.

The convention soon found that Judge Parker had only declined his own position in favor of the gold standard and that if his views should be unsatisfactory to the majority of the convention, he authorized William F. Staehlin to decline the nomination in his name. Peace was patched up among the leaders and it was agreed to send a telegram to Judge Parker, saying that the convention did not regard the money question as an issue in the campaign, and that his views did not preclude his taking the nomination on the platform already adopted.

Mr. Bryan led the fight against sending the Williams telegram to Judge Parker. He rose from a sick bed, donned his nurse and appeared in the convention in the wee small hours of the morning. His voice was husky and his face was ashen, but he fought to the last. He was voted down, as he had been on every test in the whole convention. But the thousands of applause from the galleries which greeted his every utterance, the fact that no one but Bryan could get a respectful hearing, and the mutterings of the men who feared to speak aloud—but showed that Bryan was still beloved by the rank and file of his party.

Democrats Fell Flat. Never was a campaign such a complete failure as the Democratic canvass of 1901. Yet the result for a time seemed to be in doubt. So many newspapers supported Parker and there was such an anti-Roosevelt outcry from the ultra-conservatives that the issue seemed to be very doubtful. Toward the end of the campaign, however, the Roosevelt enthusiasm reached white heat and the Parker following grew colder and colder.

Judge Parker at the very close of the canvass took up the charges which were being made against the Republicans by newspapers and circulated them in a speech which created a great sensation. He charged that George B. Cortright, as secretary of commerce and labor had obtained possession of information concerning the conduct of great business concerns; and that the same Cortright, as chairman of the National Republican Committee, was using this information to extort money from the big business men to use in the campaign. To that charge President Roosevelt replied in one of the most remarkable political utterances ever delivered. He said it was a lie, to begin with, and he warned up to the subject as he went along. Mr. Roosevelt's reply was made against the odds and in spite of the appeals of nearly every one of the Republican leaders. Yet when Judge Parker was unable to come back with the absolute proof of his assertions the Roosevelt denial sent the whole country wild with enthusiasm and the Parker hopes died dead.

The result was an overwhelming victory for Roosevelt, who was elected by the greatest popular majority ever given to any president. His plurality was over two and a half millions, more than the total vote for Lincoln in 1864. McKinley, four years before, had received a popular plurality of about 550,000. Roosevelt received only 400,000 more votes than McKinley, yet his plurality was a million and a half greater. Judge Parker received a little over five million votes, a falling off of over a million and a quarter from the vote cast for Bryan in 1900. The Socialists made great gains, polling a half million votes. The total vote cast in the whole country was nearly half a million less than in 1900. All of which goes to prove that nobody can tell what will happen in a presidential campaign until after it has already happened.

New-York - Day - By - Day

BY A. C. MONTGOMERY

NEW YORK, Oct. 11.—A page from the diary of a modern Samuel Pepys: Up and to the town shed to greet my father and be found the city mightily changed. Breakfasted at the Claridge and he was to see the baseball game. I have suffered a change toward this sport.

To my labours, but could find no heart for work gazing all the while out of the window. Came some people home from Maine and making great shifts for heights which they cannot find the town being packed, fled to the portage. Other successes include "Under Machine," "The Hat" and "The Bad Man."

Lunched with a great man of money and a sad tale he spun of two who sought to rob him, both being in high places, and one killed himself. Managing the other. And I was content to be in the lot. At a table I saw Nina Chaire, the play actress, and Nissa Metcalf, the painter, the former having played upon the custom of cutting her hair short.

For a walk in the brave dusk and putting in at Kaufmann's, the town chandelier, he told of the man who wrote him a letter signed "Fallon," proposing to commit suicide on a certain date and he had just learned that the fellow had, it being Ned Flinley, a fellow of the class, who had come upon evil days.

Dined at a waffle shop with my wife, poor wretch, and father, and then to the Hippodrome and the shining, saying elephant the most amusing thing I have seen this season. And so to bed.

Following the premier of a play the other night, two critics were passing through the lobby when the producer, halting them with: "Well, boys, what's the verdict?"

"Marvellous! well, without it," replied one. Incidentally this has been

A Real Calamity. I was in the Arizona. A regiment of colored pioneers from Dixie who had been induced into the service had just received a batch of mail. But neither Jefferson Madison Monroe nor his particular sidekick Washington Jones, was manifesting any great elation. In fact, they both looked decidedly in the dumps.

"Wash," murmured Jefferson, "the hard luckiest nigger what was ever. I don't just get a letter from mah gal and she's gone and wed and married another."

"Oh, mah, mah," wailed Wash. "You don't know what hard luck am. Me. I just got a letter from the dead board what says 'in exempt'!"—This laugh first.

What Did She Know? The hostess had trouble in getting Mr. Harper to sleep. After the long had been given, she came up with a smiling face to her guest, and made the ambiguous remark:

"Now, Mr. Harper, you must never tell me again that you cannot sleep—I know now!"—The Queen-dancer.

"Getting" His Audience. An evangelist who was conducting religious services announced that on the following evening he would speak on the subject of "Flars." He advised his hearers to read in advance the seventh chapter of Mark.

The next night he arose and said: "I am going to preach on 'Flars' tonight and I would like to know how many read the chapter I suggested." A hundred hands were upraised.

"Now," he said "you are the very persons I want to talk to—there isn't any seventeenth chapter of Mark!"—Boston Transcript.

THE O'CONNOR DON. The O'Connor Don, who has appeared to my countrymen for a monster mass meeting in County Roscommon as a means of restoring peace and order in Ireland, speaks with the authority of an Irish chief whose sept or clan has had large estates in that country for more than 700 years and who can trace his ancestry back definitely in year 300 A. D. In recent generations, notably since home rule agitation became urgent, the family has always sided with the English Conservatives in dealing with Irish matters. That is the attitude of the present chief, who of course has no followers among the Sinn Féiners although they are certain to read his picturesque exhortation which was printed in the Roscommon Messenger.

"I propose a meeting in Roscommon," he wrote, "for all those who wish the country to remain Christian and fit to live in. Are all the shopkeepers to have their homes destroyed? Are all the country people to live in terror of their lives and the risk to see the country, and no stop taken to end such a state of affairs?"

"I, for one, do not propose to sit on the fence longer and see my country ruined. I will do anything possible to bring to reason the wild beasts who are despoiling the land and bringing us all to ruin and damnation, but I can't do it alone."

The O'Connor's given name is Owen Pheelin. His father was Charles Owen O'Connor, contemporary of Gladstone and Parnell in parliament and opposed to both of them in Irish matters. The eldest son, Denis Charles Joseph, succeeded to the title of The O'Connor Don and held it until his death in 1917, when it passed to the present incumbent.

One of the most distinguished of the line was Rodrick O'Connor, who is said to have exercised supreme authority in Ireland until 1172, when he passed life to King Henry II of England. The word "Don" prefixed to the name signifies that the bearer is the principal representative of the noble house that once enjoyed sovereign sway. The family estates are among the best properties in County Roscommon.

That is the attitude of the present chief, who of course has no followers among the Sinn Féiners although they are certain to read his picturesque exhortation which was printed in the Roscommon Messenger.

"I propose a meeting in Roscommon," he wrote, "for all those who wish the country to remain Christian and fit to live in. Are all the shopkeepers to have their homes destroyed? Are all the country people to live in terror of their lives and the risk to see the country, and no stop taken to end such a state of affairs?"

"I, for one, do not propose to sit on the fence longer and see my country ruined. I will do anything possible to bring to reason the wild beasts who are despoiling the land and bringing us all to ruin and damnation, but I can't do it alone."

The O'Connor's given name is Owen Pheelin. His father was Charles Owen O'Connor, contemporary of Gladstone and Parnell in parliament and opposed to both of them in Irish matters. The eldest son, Denis Charles Joseph, succeeded to the title of The O'Connor Don and held it until his death in 1917, when it passed to the present incumbent.

One of the most distinguished of the line was Rodrick O'Connor, who is said to have exercised supreme authority in Ireland until 1172, when he passed life to King Henry II of England. The word "Don" prefixed to the name signifies that the bearer is the principal representative of the noble house that once enjoyed sovereign sway. The family estates are among the best properties in County Roscommon.

THE O'CONNOR DON. The O'Connor Don, who has appeared to my countrymen for a monster mass meeting in County Roscommon as a means of restoring peace and order in Ireland, speaks with the authority of an Irish chief whose sept or clan has had large estates in that country for more than 700 years and who can trace his ancestry back definitely in year 300 A. D. In recent generations, notably since home rule agitation became urgent, the family has always sided with the English Conservatives in dealing with Irish matters. That is the attitude of the present chief, who of course has no followers among the Sinn Féiners although they are certain to read his picturesque exhortation which was printed in the Roscommon Messenger.

"I propose a meeting in Roscommon," he wrote, "for all those who wish the country to remain Christian and fit to live in. Are all the shopkeepers to have their homes destroyed? ## New-York - Day - By - Day

BY A. C. MONTGOMERY

NEW YORK, Oct. 11.—A page from the diary of a modern Samuel Pepys: Up and to the town shed to greet my father and be found the city mightily changed. Breakfasted at the Claridge and he was to see the baseball game. I have suffered a change toward this sport.

To my labours, but could find no heart for work gazing all the while out of the window. Came some people home from Maine and making great shifts for heights which they cannot find the town being packed, fled to the portage. Other successes include "Under Machine," "The Hat" and "The Bad Man."

Lunched with a great man of money and a sad tale he spun of two who sought to rob him, both being in high places, and one killed himself. Managing the other. And I was content to be in the lot. At a table I saw Nina Chaire, the play actress, and Nissa Metcalf, the painter, the former having played upon the custom of cutting her hair short.

For a walk in the brave dusk and putting in at Kaufmann's, the town chandelier, he told of the man who wrote him a letter signed "Fallon," proposing to commit suicide on a certain date and he had just learned that the fellow had, it being Ned Flinley, a fellow of the class, who had come upon evil days.

Dined at a waffle shop with my wife, poor wretch, and father, and then to the Hippodrome and the shining, saying elephant the most amusing thing I have seen this season. And so to bed.

Following the premier of a play the other night, two critics were passing through the lobby when the producer, halting them with: "Well, boys, what's the verdict?"

"Marvellous! well, without it," replied one. Incidentally this has been

A Real Calamity. I was in the Arizona. A regiment of colored pioneers from Dixie who had been induced into the service had just received a batch of mail. But neither Jefferson Madison Monroe nor his particular sidekick Washington Jones, was manifesting any great elation. In fact, they both looked decidedly in the dumps.

"Wash," murmured Jefferson, "the hard luckiest nigger what was ever. I don't just get a letter from mah gal and she's gone and wed and married another."

"Oh, mah, mah," wailed Wash. "You don't know what hard luck am. Me. I just got a letter from the dead board what says 'in exempt'!"—This laugh first.

What Did She Know? The hostess had trouble in getting Mr. Harper to sleep. After the long had been given, she came up with a smiling face to her guest, and made the ambiguous remark:

"Now, Mr. Harper, you must never tell me again that you cannot sleep—I know now!"—The Queen-dancer.

An English lady had a steed. She called him "Ighland Day. She rode for exercise, and this Rhode Island every day.

"Getting" His Audience. An evangelist who was conducting religious services announced that on the following evening he would speak on the subject of "Flars." He advised his hearers to read in advance the seventh chapter of Mark.

The next night he arose and said: "I am going to preach on 'Flars' tonight and I would like to know how many read the chapter I suggested." A hundred hands were upraised.

Cole Says Machine Hit Buggy; "Bridge Victims" Are Better

Hear Is The Annual Cheep Squeal From Cannonville

HEARON, Oct. 11.—It is understood that the Portsmouth High School coach declared after Saturday's game that Portsmouth would discontinue athletic relations with Ironton High. The statement could not be verified, but it would not be at all surprising. Every time Portsmouth is defeated or held to a tight score the other side is always accused of unfair tactics, especially if it happens to be Ironton that furnishes the fly for their opponent. Portsmouth is to be commended upon her fighting qualities on the gridiron and her splendid determination. It is to be hoped that their sportsmanship is such as to make possible a ready recovery from the surprising setback they received at Beechwood yesterday. The only scores made by either side were made on identical plays and the punting was imperfectly distributed. Portsmouth would have won had not one of her men pulled a "buzzer" but her score was made on an equally flagrant lack of teamwork on the part of Ironton.

Charles Kirkendall, a well-known West End barber, who suffered a fractured skull in an accident at the north end of the Solway river bridge early Saturday evening, remained in an unconscious condition at Schirmer hospital Monday. He was reported much better this morning, his condition Sunday taking a change for the better. He is expected to regain consciousness in a short time.

Herman Cole, who resides on Second street, near Solway street, was removed to his home from the hospital this morning. He suffered a concussion of the brain and retained his faculties Sunday when he told relatives of the accident.

Kirkendall and Cole were found unconscious in the wreckage of Kirkendall's buggy at the end of the bridge Saturday night, how the buggy was wrecked was a mystery.

Supply John Cole was able to talk the told relatives that the horse was snorting and that a machine hit the rear of the buggy. According to Cole he had been in the river near the mill just below the bridge gathering river coal and that Kirkendall had loaned him the buggy to take the coal home. He had taken the coal home and returned to the cannery near the mill for Kirkendall, the two men being on their way to their homes when their buggy was struck by the machine which failed to stop and give the man.

Lee Kirkendall a brother of the injured man says that he examined the wreckage of the buggy Sunday and that one of the rear wheels indicates that a machine hit it.

Cole suffered more from an injury to his side and back than to his head. The injury on the head was first thought to be a fracture but his attending physician Sunday after a close examination found the man to be suffering from a concussion.
